

Financial education is arguably the most important education you can have, yet many of us are never taught about money in school or at home. To the contrary, we often learn bad habits, subconscious beliefs, and ideas about money which can continue to plague us for generations.

Did you know:

- The average age of widowhood is 56?
- Ninety-percent of women will responsible for managing their money at some point in their lives?
- Disagreements about money are the #1 cause of divorce?

Linda P. Jones wants to revolutionize the way women are taught about money and wealth building and empower women to learn how to become financially independent! Some women hold themselves back from learning about wealth building because they don't feel worthy or deserving of wealth. Many women are apprehensive about dealing with money. Women may experience fear about having a lot of money and aren't interested in talking about money with their significant others or financial advisors. Traditional financial education has not taught women about money in a way that appeals to them and uses their strengths such as their intuitive gifts, social nature, nurturing ways, and cooperative style. It is still very left-brained, masculine, and frankly, boring to women. Until now! Women find making money and building wealth fun when they are taught in a way that appeals to them and are treated as the intelligent, capable, beings they are. It's not about being talked down to, quite the contrary, Jones teaches how to recognize investment cycles and economic bubbles (like billionaires do) and shares cutting-edge investment education in plain English without jargon and lingo. It's time to break the cycle of the past and change womens' future around money so they will have a positive, lasting impact on future generations and the world.
